② Toddler A: "Get rid of Big Ben I hate it!" angry character acting (arms)

③ Toddler B fully turns around while saying "No!" → "I just-" (T pose) ((protective))

④ (Flashback non lip sync) UGLY!!!

Mum holding toy over bin while Toddler B reaches arms out with grabby motion
Toddler B continues to speak at the same time: "I told Kat that I wanted Big Ben -"

⑤ (same flashback scene)

Toddler B face close up with pleading eyes

Toddler B "That's all I care about -" * He is handed the Toy (over the shoulder part of we are still looking at him) "That's all I care about is Big Ben"

⑥ Toddler A (back in their previous playroom) (looks to the side/disgusted/grumpy with eyes closed and crossing arms) "I don't like Big Ben"

⑦ Toddler B protectively holds Big Ben and leans forward while saying: "No! NO!" while Toddler A tries to grab it / tries to pull it away

⑧ Toddler B manages to fully pull Big Ben away and turns away protectively " " if it's gonna go it's gonna go to me ". He holds it up like Simba and turns back slightly towards the camera " If Big Ben is going anywhere it's to me! "

Big Ben Design

I ended up changing the design slightly while animating as he was already quite complicated. To save time I removed the crack on the shoulder and the stain on the diaper. Overall, I'm pleased with how ridiculously silly yet beautiful he looks, it truly drives the comedic timing in the animation home.

Big Ben 'Realistic' Frame Inspiration

The digitally painted close up frame of Big Ben is a crucial comedic moment in my animation. It almost 'breaks character' of the animation as it is completely unexpected from the style the viewer had at least some time to adjust to. The frame is heavily inspired by Spongebob's hyper detailed close up shots that I found super fun and a perfect comedic addition to an otherwise unassuming animation.
